Message & Organizational Overview | 2023

A year of community commitment

In 2023, AGAMA Charity continued its commitment to practical, community-rooted support for children, learning and the environment. The results below reflect programme figures reported by the organization and are presented to make its work visible to supporters and partners.

Our approach

AGAMA Charity's work is rooted in the belief that children and communities should have practical opportunities to learn, grow and build more secure futures. Sustainable progress requires local relationships, responsible stewardship, attention to safeguarding and an honest account of what has—and has not—been measured.

Reporting note

Programme figures in this report are based on information reported by AGAMA Charity. Supporting registers, receipts, partner confirmations, photographs and monitoring records should be retained by the organization. Figures should be corrected if verification identifies any discrepancy.

Programme Highlights & Community Outcomes

Education and access

AGAMA Charity reported supporting 50 children through sponsorship and providing 10 bicycles. These interventions are intended to reduce barriers to learning and help children access education more consistently.

Environment and community

The organization reported planting 700 trees in Gekumu, contributing to local environmental awareness and tree-growing efforts.

Learning and accountability

For continued improvement, programme records should capture the children supported, bicycle recipients, tree survival and maintenance, and feedback from participating families and community representatives.

Stewardship, Safeguarding & Learning

Responsible stewardship

AGAMA Charity recognizes that donor confidence depends on the responsible use of funds and clear records. Financial statements and expenditure summaries should be maintained separately, reconciled to supporting records and approved through the organization’s governance process. This impact report does not present unverified financial totals or imply that accounts have been independently audited.

Child safeguarding and dignity

The safety, dignity, privacy and best interests of children should guide programme delivery and public communications. Identifiable photographs and personal stories should be published only with appropriate consent and safeguarding review. Public reports should avoid unnecessary personal details about children and vulnerable people.

Monitoring, evaluation and learning

Programme monitoring should record what was delivered, who was reached, where activities took place and what changed. Where possible, AGAMA Charity should collect participant feedback, follow up on the continued use of distributed items or services, and document lessons that inform future programme decisions.

Acknowledgement

AGAMA Charity thanks the children, families, community members, volunteers, partners and supporters who contribute to its mission. Specific donor names, partner logos and individual contributions should be included only after confirmation and with appropriate permission.

Priorities for the Next Period

Build on education support, strengthen follow-up with sponsored children and families, and document environmental activities through dated records and follow-up on tree survival.

Commitment to transparency

AGAMA Charity is committed to communicating its work with care and accuracy. This report is intended to provide a concise public account of reported programme activity. Detailed financial information, supporting programme records and further explanations should be made available through the organization’s established governance and reporting processes, subject to privacy and safeguarding requirements.

Publication and approval

This report should be approved by the authorized AGAMA Charity leadership or board representative before publication. The organization should retain evidence supporting all figures and statements, verify the registration details against its official certificate, and confirm that any photographs and third-party references are approved for public use.
